This paper identify the information provided to residents of Sporades islands in Greece concerning natural disasters. The paper gives information about for disaster analysis, resulting from interviews to residents. The choice of sample size is expressed in detail. The integration of media to cater information on risk factors has been largely studied in the discussion section. In general it is an interesting paper that will give opportunity to expand the knowledge in the area of natural hazards, media theory and sociology. I suggest to accept it as it is.
